Abstract:

This dissertation examines the issue of "place" in the lives and works of three contemporary artists of the African Diaspora: Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, IngridMwangiRobertHutter, and Wang. Place as a location is a core challenge of globalism: though fundamental to our existence, it has ce permanent or definite. However, place is more than location--it is cultural, gendered, historical, i personal and social, among other things--and can only be fully understood in considering severa different facets. Each of the artists in this dissertation has had to navigate through instances of bia racism and chauvinism), and physical displacement in order to create, find, and represent their place case studies, the artists' works and interviews serve as points of departure, illustrating how insi Phenomenology (Merleau-Ponty and Casey) and from Humanistic Geography (Tuan, Relph, Massey) from the discourses of feminist geography and contemporary art historiography can help us understand there is currently no systematic study of place in art, nor an art-specific place theory to use in analysis, i a summary of the geographical and phenomenological insights and proposes a "lens" c apply to art works and artists.
