Abstract

A number of years ago, Wilma was part of the organising committee. The University of Wollongong in New South Wales hosted the Australian Psychological Society's annual conference. We invited students to submit an artwork that addressed the theme of the conference, 'Why Psychology Matters'. We invited experts from the City Art Gallery to select the winning entry. One of the judges said that he had selected the artwork after he had melted plastic masses that were a focal part of the piece had a Barbie doll. For Wilma, a self-confessed non-artist, this raises the question of whether the artwork would still have gained first prize if she had known the original source of the melted plastic. In other words, is the value inherent in the piece itself or was additional information required for its creative contribution?
