Author(s) : Donahue, J. M.

Book : The Nicaraguan revolution in health: from Somoza to the Sandinistas 198

Abstract : This book explores the changes taking place in the health system since the 1979 revolution within the context of revolutionary change. It provides a study of the process of conforming a health system to a new political environment. Attention is given to the course of events clarifying how changes in the health system were negotiated from 1979 on, when the health system was to be an integral part of a participatory democracy within a socialist political economy. Two different approaches reflecting 2 different models of primary care delivery are indicated: (1) empl control and supervision to insure quality care within a clinical setting and (2) the dissemination of health knowledge and both preventive and curative he non-clinical settings.
