Association football and English society 1863-1915.

Author(s) : Mason, T.

Miscellaneous : Association football and English society 1863-1915. 1981 pp.278

Abstract : The book aims to establish to what extent football in this period was a middle class sport and the meaning of such a description, and to ascertain the degree to which the game was professionalized and staged by a new breed of tertiary sector entrepreneurs who saw the medium as a means of getting rich quickly. They do not seem to have the problem of crowd behaviour and is depicted as one of the terraces although this may be due to the fact that hooliganism was not a major kind of media coverage currently generated. The clubs were liable to be as unstable as many of today's clubs, with status and control within working class communities being the most likely aim of dealings in football during this period.
