Throughout history and across social and cultural contexts, people have ascribed wisdom to those who see reality as that which is collected here show, the immaterial is not easily separated to an extraordinary degree, by their expressions of immateriality. These essays explore varied manifestations of materiality from ancient times. In the process of materiality in shaping humanity, they signal the need to make room for the material. Considering topics as complex as the trading instruments can be compared with the oldest idiom of Islamic banking, Australian Aboriginal art, derivatives trading compared with an age-old desire for an unmediated relationship with the environment, each essay adds depth and nuance to the acknowledgment and rethinking of one of the basic problems of human existence.
