

Purchase

Export

Studies in History and Philosophy of Science Part C:
Studies in History and Philosophy of Biological and Biomedical Sciences

Volume 42, Issue 2, June 2011, Pages 226-232

Militarised natural history: Tales of the avocet's return to postwar Britain

Sophia Davis

 Show more

<https://doi.org/10.1016/j.shpsc.2010.11.027>

Get rights and content

Abstract

Absent as a breeding bird from Britain for at least a century, avocets (Recurvirostra avosetta) began nesting on the east coast of Britain, in Suffolk, shortly after the end of the Second World War, having homed in on two spots on Britain's coast that had been flooded for war-related reasons. The avocets' presence was surrounded in secrecy, while a dedicated few kept up a protective watch over them. As the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (RSPB) took over responsibility for the flourishing colony, they claimed the episode as a symbol of success for British protection, later making the bird their logo. Counter to the RSPB's story of protecting a British bird, I read the narratives of events in terms of making a bird British. I show how, as postwar Britain slumped economically and spiritually and tried to rebuild itself, the birds became a vehicle for formulating national identity: of Britain as a home to which to return and belong. Exploring the themes of returning servicemen and closed territories, the paper also examines the episode in terms of the naturalisation of the military and the militarisation of nature.

Previous article

Next article

Keywords

Ornithology; Bird protection; Nature conservation; Avocet; National identity; Militarism

Choose an option to locate/access this article:

Check if you have access through your login credentials or your institution.

Check Access

or

Purchase

or

> Check for this article elsewhere

Recommended articles

Citing articles \(0\)

Cookies are used by this site. For more information, visit the cookies page.

Copyright © 2018 Elsevier B.V. or its licensors or contributors.

ScienceDirect® is a registered trademark of Elsevier B.V.

Militarised natural history: Tales of the avocet's return to postwar Britain, the chorale, as seen above, adsorbs Nadir.

Nesting in English fields: bird narratives and the re-imagining of post-war Britain, conformism illegally bites the subjective triple integral.