Abstract : This second edition book discusses the economic structure in rural communities and urban neighbourhoods in the USA and reflects an expanded understanding of the dynamics of rural economic development, change, and divided into four sections: (1) community economic development theory, (2) factor markets, (3) institutions and the art of community economics, and (4) community economics. Section 1 presents a definition of community economic development, the growth theory, space and community economics and community markets. Section 2 deals with land markets, labour markets, financial markets, technology and innovation, nonmarket goods and services, and local government and public goods. Section 3 focuses on institutions and society, modelling and decision-making, and the practice of community economic development. Section 4 discusses the descriptive tools of community economic analysis, and tools of community economic analysis: fixed-price and price endogenous models.
