Abstract

This thesis examines the experiences of fairgoers at the Lewis American Pacific Exposition and Oriental Fair held in Portlan October of 1905. Historians have framed world's fairs and inte sites of legitimating narratives and restagings of empire and na focuses on women, Asian Americans, and Native Americans w disrupted the performance and exhibition of U.S. imperialism Portland, Oregon. It considers who benefitted from or endure demonstrations of imperial culture at the Fair. Following the p and colonial histories should be considered in the same analyt systemic power of domestic imperialism in the United States e Americans into the experiences of most nonwhite American c adds a metropolitan approach to Native-American history and colonial approach to the study of African-American, Asian-Ar women's histories. In three chapters, this study explores a ran 1905 Lewis and Clark Centennial - patched over by the Exposit overlooked by previous historians of the Fair - that shed light class, and gender within the processes of empire and nation b century West.
