Abstract

From the beginning of the Zionist enterprise to found a Jewish national home, or state, in Palestine, Zionists called the "Arab problem" — the fact that the "Land of Israel" was already populated. In this meticulous study, the author proposes solutions to that problem — the transfer of the indigenous Palestinian population to neighboring countries. This is the most comprehensive study to date on the concept of "transfer" in Zionist thinking from the late nineteenth century to the present. The study of the Palestinians is invaluable for the light it throws on the attitudes towards the Palestinians of the Israeli leaders on the eve of the exodus of some 750,000 Palestinians during the 1948 war.
