Abstract A racially-weighted Constitution, promulgated by decree in 1990, divided the country and invited international institutions of good governance. In 1995, an independent Constitution Review Commission appointed by the Constitution. Its report formed the basis of a new Constitution promulgated, after wide-ranging consultation. This collection of essays looks at the politics and dynamics of that momentous event, and the role of key players. It plunged Fiji into its first major crisis of the twenty-first century. The essays look at some of the key political and current debates about the nature and meaning of politics in Fiji remains. All the contributors are recognised
