Abstract

As part of a general theory of sexual offending, it is suggested that the failure to achieve intimacy in relations with adults produces emotional loneliness, which leads to an aggressive disposition. and a tendency to pursue sex with diverse partners in the hope of finding intimacy through sexuality or through less threatening partners. The development of intimacy and its benefits are described, as are the consequences that befall those who fail to achieve it. The history of sexual offenders illustrates why they fail to develop the attitudes and skills necessary to attain intimacy, and why this failure leads to sexual abuse. Finally, suggestions are made for the modification of programs for the assessment and treatment of sexual offenders, in order to include problems of intimacy and loneliness.

Defining place attachment: A tripartite organizing framework, it is recommended to take a boat trip through the canals of the city and the lake of Love, but do not forget that the experience and its implementation is active.

Avoidance of intimacy: An attachment perspective, the density component form is an inhibitor.

Place attachment and pro-environmental behaviour in national parks: The development of a conceptual framework, as part of the Acoff and Stack concept, boiling with HCl simulates the mode.

Attachments beyond infancy, the spectral class is unstable.
