Abstract
In this paper, we analyze some controversial aspects of bloggi from the perspective of privacy. In particular, we focus on He of privacy as "contextual integrity" and apply it to personal bl case of the "Washingtonienne" blogger, in particular. We exan whether personal blogs that are not password protected can b private contexts" according to Nissenbaum's principles of pri cannot. Using Nissenbaum's original model, we conclude that those who disclose personal information in such blogs are uni that Nissenbaum's expanded theory (see Nissenbaum, 2010) c contemporary debate about privacy and blogging in a wide va technological contexts, in addition to personal blogs, and we e apply Nissenbaum's model in those contexts.
