This paper discusses important and fruitful links between (Critical) Discourse Analysis and Pragmatics. In a detail utterances of an election speech by the Austrian rightwing politician Jörg Haider, it is illustrated in which ways a pragmatic approach grasps the intricacy of anti-Semitic meanings, directed towards the President of the Viennes The necessity of in-depth context-analysis in multiple layers (from the socio-political context up to the co-text of moreover emphasizes the importance of interdisciplinary approaches when investigating such complex issues as Semitism as produced and reproduced in discourse. More specifically, the relevance of pragmatic devices such a presuppositions and implicatures, is discussed when analyzing instances of ‘coded language’, i.e., utterances with and anti-Semitic meanings as common in official discourses in Western Europe.
