 Turkish village.Author(s) : STIRLING, P.Book : Turkish village. 1965 pp.316 pp. ref.Bibl.

Abstract : The book is based on a year's research, divided between 1949-1952, in Turkey during which the author studied one village thoroughly and different village in rather less detail. The first village, Sakaltutan, was chosen as an orthodox Muslim, Turkish-speaking village of modest size, and fairly far away from the direct influence of the cities, or the plateau which forms the largest part of the country. The second village, Elbasi, was chosen as providing certain contrasts with Sakaltutan: it was richer, more dependent on agriculture, more sophisticated and less isolated. The book is divided into 12 chapters: (1) Turkey (the Ottoman Empire, republic and reform government); (2) the setting; (3) villages and households; (4) the village ecc household economy; (6) household and family structure; (7) the domestic c kinship; (9) marriage; (10) rank; (11) groups, feuds and power; (12) the villag world. The book forms an analysis in the concepts of current sociology of th structure of these village communities and the author emphasizes the unex great similarities of the social forms in the communities of the region. A. T. S
