Abstract

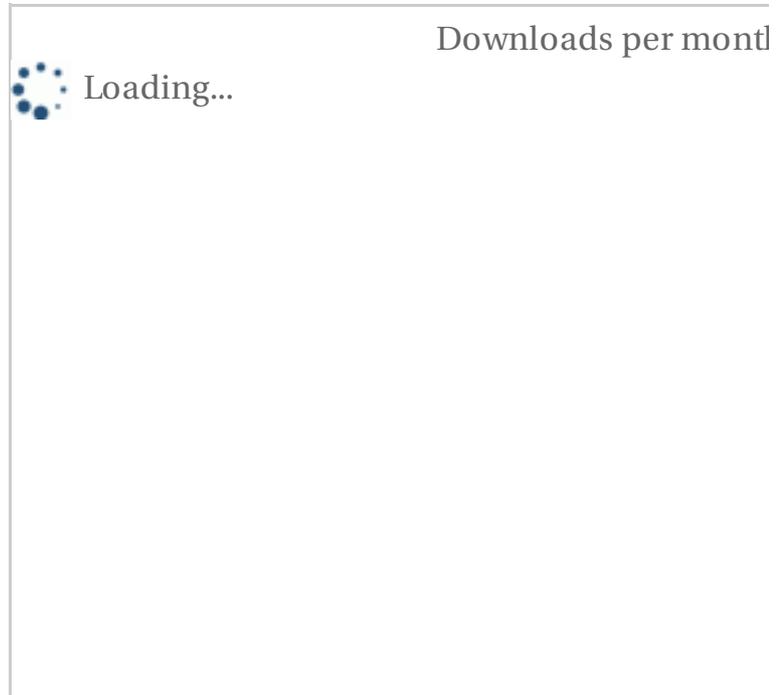

This thesis examines the day to day practices that constituted within the range of her writings, as well as her society. Anne's lifetime, of her own love and relationships with the 'fairer sex' through her correspondence and plain handwritten journal entries, has been explored by Hall and Jill Liddington in Female Fortune and Nature's Daughter. As a gentlewoman of adequate means, Anne has garnered some academic attention and agency within an early nineteenth century social and historic context. This thesis analysed over the past nearly twenty years by lesbian feminist scholars of sexuality concerned with the history and development of non-heterosexualities. The source for theorising Anne's sexuality has been the edited volumes by Helena Whitbread in I Know My Own Heart and No Priest Shall Judge Me. These analyses deal either with the theorisation of Anne's sexuality or with reconciling these categories has troubled the analysis of her correspondence. In this materials, I have used an interdisciplinary feminist approach to explore everyday interactions in her writings. Taking the seven months of the thesis focused upon Anne's textual practices within her journal volumes and her practices with the other guests at the guesthouse 24 Place Verger, as well as the widow Mrs. Maria Barlow. The journal volumes and correspondence explore the gentlewoman's engagement with early nineteenth century British society.
