Book : The agricultural policy of Muhammad 'Ali in Egypt 1961 pp.393 pp.

Abstract : The author's purpose is to discover whether Muhammad 'Ali, who was appointed governor of Egypt by the Ottoman sultan in 1805, had a well-considered agricultural policy of lasting significance for the development of Egyptian institutions. It shows that the measures taken by Muhammad 'Ali affecting land tenure reclassified the class of landholders by another to the detriment of the peasant class and the institutions. Although the Pasha can be credited with changing the Egyptian economy from a subsistence to a cash crop economy by the investment of capital in the de-agriculture, the financial benefits gained thereby accrued primarily to the Pa is concluded, after careful analysis of the problem from every facet, that far an agricultural policy per se, Muhammad 'Ali merely utilized the agricultural v for the purposes of personal aggrandizement and the attainment of a posit power and independence for himself and his descendants within the Ottom
