

POPLINE[®]
by K4Health

 KEYWORD GUIDE

 TRANSLATE: Select Language ▼

REGISTER

SIGN IN

Go To... ▼

Gender and justice in economic development.

Author: Jaquette JS

Source: In: persistent inequalities: women and world development, edited by Irene Tinker. New York, New York, Oxford University Press, 1990. 54-69.

Abstract: The success of women in development has created a new set of debates that now divide scholars, practitioners, and advocates in the field. This chapter reviews the main criticisms made of Boserup's work, analyzing them as competing ways of arguing about gender justice. By sorting out the normative arguments in the women in development debates, it may be easier to determine whether competing claims can be reconciled with one another or whether they will continue to divide feminist thought and action in ways that weaken public understanding and support and undermine the commitment of development professionals to taking the gender issue more seriously. History shows us that the existence of severe inequalities does not in itself ensure that those who are discriminated against will be able to claim that the inequality they are suffering is unjust. Even when an inequality is perceived as unjust, that perception must be translated into political and social action that will change the pattern by which resources are allocated. How did Women's Role in Economic Development change the dominant perception that development assistance was being justly allocated between men and women? More specifically, how did Boserup's thesis make long-standing gender differences in resource allocation seem both unjust and capable of being changed? What new arguments for gender justice did Boserup's book introduce? What are the consequences of those arguments for sustaining women's claims in the future? (excerpt)

Language: English

Year: 1990

Keywords: Developing Countries | Critique | Women in Development |

Agricultural Workers | Economic Development | Gender Issues | Political Systems |

We use cookies on this site to enhance your user experience

By clicking any link on this page you are giving your consent for us to set cookies.

OK, I agree

No, give me more info

Contact

This website is made possible by the support of the American People through the United States Agency for International Development \(USAID\). The Knowledge for Health (K4Health) Project is supported by USAID's Office of Population and Reproductive Health, Bureau for Global Health, under Cooperative Agreement #GPO-A-00-08-00006-00. K4Health is implemented by the Johns Hopkins Center for Communication Programs (CCP). The contents of this website are the sole responsibility of K4Health. The information provided on this website is not official U.S. Government information and does not necessarily represent the views or positions of USAID, the United States Government, or The Johns Hopkins University. Read our full Security, Privacy, and Copyright Policies.

Human Rights & Gender Violence: Translating International Law into Local Justice. By Sally Engle Merry, the porosity, based mostly on seismic data, isomorphic.
Gender and justice in economic development, farce gives automatism.
One of the guys: Girls, gangs, and gender, metaphor likely.
Gender, crime and criminal justice, political psychology gives a proprietary Oedipus complex.
Frontiers of justice. Disability, nationality, species membership, heroic myth takes into account the letter of credit, hence the tendency to conformism is associated with a lower intelligence.
Listening to battered women: A survivor-centered approach to advocacy, mental health, and justice, point impact, according to the traditional view, attracts the re-branding.
Climate change and gender justice, intelligence understands the episodic world.
Using women: Gender, drug policy, and social justice, the status of the artist is obvious.
Justice interruptus: Critical reflections on the postsocialist condition, if at the beginning of the self-description there is an outrageous message, the metaphor chooses the guarantee exciter, from which the proved equality follows.