As the global economy has become interconnected and the Internet ubiquitous, jurisdictional conflicts involving States, private actors, and regulatory agencies are becoming increasingly common. States also frequently assert their jurisdiction over conduct occurring outside their own territory, particularly with regard to conduct on the Internet.¹

During this time, data protection law has evolved from a niche area to one that has application to nearly any field. Data protection law gives rights to individuals in how data identifying them or pertaining to them are processed, and subjects such processing to a defined set of safeguards.

Following enactment of the first data protection laws in Europe in the 1970s,² the Council of Europe Convention for the Protection of Individuals with regard to Automatic Processing of Personal Data³ was adopted, and...
